Protocol Independent Multicast (PIM) refers to a set of multicast routing methods, all based upon the idea that unicast routing is the foundation of multicast routing, and multicast routing should be able to utilize any unicast routing protocol, e.g., ISIS or OSPF.

We survey multicast routing methods for when the set of destinations is static, and for when it is dynamic. While most of the methods we review are tree based, some non-tree methods are also discussed.

"The overall plan of the book is excellent, starting with a basic overview of what multicast is (and does), including why multicast is more efficient than unicast for multiple receiver traffic streams, and the difference between broadcasting by flooding and the general concept of multicast.

Support for dynamic multicast groups: Multicast groups can be classified as static and dynamic. The members of a static multicast group do not change over time; in a dynamic multi- cast group, new members may join or existing members leave. A good multicast tree should allow multicast members to join or leave the multicast tree in a seamless fashion.

Multicast routing algorithms and protocols: A Tutorial

If possible, Multicast applications should attempt to detect and avoid congestion conditions. â€¢ Duplicates: Some multicast protocol mechanisms (e.g. Asserts, Registers and SPT Transitions) result in the occasional generation of duplicate packets. Multicast applications should be designed to expect occasional duplicate packets.

Introduction to IP Multicast - cisco.com

Multicast is well supported by local area networks such as Ethernet [9] that provide efficient broadcast delivery and a large space of multicast addresses. However, multicast as a general facility across large extended LANs and inter- networks raises a number of concerns.

Multicast Routing in Datagram Internetworks and Extended LANs

Multicast routers execute a multicast routing protocol to define delivery paths that enable the forwarding of multicast datagrams across an internetwork. The Distance Vector Multicast Routing Protocol (DVMRP) is a distance-vector routing protocol, and Multicast OSPF (MOSPF) is an extension to the OSPF link-state unicast routing protocol.
