Conditioning on the discrete level. Example: A fair coin is tossed 10 times; the random variable X is the number of heads in these 10 tosses, and Y is the number of heads in the first 3 tosses. In spite of the fact that Y emerges before X it may happen that someone knows X but not Y . Conditional probability

Conditioning (probability) - Wikipedia

In probability theory, the conditional expectation, conditional expected value, or conditional mean of a random variable is its expected value "the value it would take on average" over an arbitrarily large number of occurrences "given that a certain set of "conditions" is known to occur. If the random variable can take on only a finite number of values, the "conditions" are that ... will be a family of possible conditional distributions corresponding to the different possible values of t . However, it may happen that for each possible value of t , the conditional joint distribution of X_1, \dots, X_n given that $T = t$ is the same for all the values of t and therefore does not actually depend on the value of t . In this case, we say that T is a
