Financial economics is the branch of economics characterized by a "concentration on monetary activities", in which "money of one type or another is likely to appear on both sides of a trade". Its concern is thus the interrelation of financial variables, such as prices, interest rates and shares, as opposed to those concerning the real economy. It has two main areas of focus: asset pricing and ...

Risk-based pricing is a methodology adopted by many lenders in the mortgage and financial services industries. It has been in use for many years as lenders try to measure loan risk in terms of interest rates and other fees. The interest rate on a loan is determined not only by the time value of money, but also by the lender's estimate of the probability that the borrower will default on the loan.

I directly focus on the source of financing in takeovers instead of the common but indirect approximation by the payment method. By examining a sample of 610 acquisitions occurring between 1991 and 2009, I am able to distinguish between several different sources of financing for sizeable transactions and to additionally control for any payment effect.
